H. M. S. Pioneer, R Zambesi

31st January 1862

Dear Captain Washington

This morning H. M. S.
Gorgon hove in sight off East Luabo with a brig in tow having the portable steamer & M^{rs} L. on board. We go out to her tomorrow morning. Captain Wilson came in over a very rough bar on account of seeing us here while we had come only to wood, there being but little to be had at Kongone. Rae came with him He has the tools you mention for roadmaking which are amply sufficient, and 3 casks of ale for which accept my best thanks

I am very much distressed to find by your letter of August that you have been led to believe that the naval officer selected by you for the Pioneer "returned without any reason". I refrained from giving you

[0002]

anything derogatory, and left him to "give his own explanation" but rubbed out the words now underlined at his suggestion as likely to convey the idea that anything like a quarrel between him & me had occurred, but I never anticipated that there would be no reason alledged to you. I expected that he would put the reason in the most favourable light for himself and was quite willing that it should be so. He claimed to be set over D^r Kirk & had not a syllable to support his claim. D^r K. offered assurances that no interference would take place on his part in the management of the ship while I was alive nor after my decease until the pleasure of the Foreign Office should be known but "Oh dear no he would not play second fiddle to anyone" [0003]

D^r K. could not reasonably be placed under May without an order to that effect, so it became a simple question of justice & fair play. As far as I was concerned it was Kirk and knowledge of the country - people and languages - or May without knowledge of either, but a verbal assertion of appointment to a naval position in the Expedition which has no existence. He could not manage a wooding party of natives, so I had to do all that, leaving May to sit on his easy chair. His eye was not accustomed to river work, though he promised to become expert, so I had to pilot him or see the ship run aground perpetually in the Rovuma - and all the claims referred to a time when I should have "kicked the bucket" not over seemly from a weak dawdling whose chances [0004]

of life were certainly inferior to mine. I have never had a serious illness since my return - Had marched on foot to Sesheke & never spared myself - And as this was the man of whom you told me in London that "should any one set up his back as May had done in the Niger I would be justified in landing him on the first island” I thought it was best to keep Kirk & let him go his way quietly. I respectfully maintain that in so doing I was guilty of no disregard to your feelings, and I very earnestly beg a reconsideration of your sentence against against me. I entreat you not to throw us overboard though it is a fact that civil & naval officers never will get on well together. Continue your kindness and if life is granted me I shall be no discredit to you. I write this in a hurry feeling very sorry that my conduct which I still think good has been disapproved D. Livingstone
