

Letter to [James Young], 17 April 1857

Livingstone, David, 1813-1873

Published by Livingstone Online (livingstoneonline.org)

[0001]

57 Sloane (St)

17th April 1857

Dear Sir

I am really very much ashamed that your kind note of invitation should have remained so long unanswered.
I was not by any means insensible to the obligation I owed to the kindly feelings which prompted you to offer me the pleasure of a sojourn in your house during my visit

[0002]

to Glasgow but having the privelege of ~~the~~ being a guest with my old and much esteemed friend Professor Andrew Buchanan I knew the only thing I could say would be in the way of declining the favour. This I have a particular aversion to do to any one especially when I am sure of the offer being as this was a genuine hearty one, and as the time sped past most rapidly my mind being fully [0003]

occupied in writing the Narrative I am ashamed to say the thing went nearly out of my recollection But when I had the honour of being introduced [yesterday] to your daughters my negligence came rather more vividly than pleasantly to my memory.

I thank you most heartily for your kind invitation but on account of being expected by my excellent friend D^r Buchanan I fear I shall have the pleasure of only of making a call when I am in the city.

[0004]

I heard your daughters playing some pretty music at M^r Lindsay's last [night] they seemed well and hearty. I wanted some scotch tunes from them as having more sense in them than the Italian stuff into which they are drilled. I suspect their Mamma will consider me heretical in this.

I am Dear Sir

Yours &c

David Livingstone