Unpublished letter of
D^r Livingstone

February 7th 1871.

Manyema

(Bearing on the
for: office question of salary)

Being unable to carry paper in this damp climate I have given the Foreign Office only one sheet of closely written matter much like what I have given you but ending with the following sentence .

"I would fain erase Your Lordship's approba- of my labour but the under secretary's Murray's impertinent letter forbids any Government

[0002]

Government from allowing me any claim no matter what services I may render" .

M^r Murray's "ungracious and unjust" effusion contained internal evidence that a statesman like Lord Russell knew nothing of it for we might bind down future [...]
to give but never not to give this could only emanate from what the office slang calls

"a safeman". He withdrew the most offensive part by sending a copy without it, but had not the Grace to say, it was withdrawn .
My

[0003]

My first effort if I get home, will not be to speak to geographers but to bring the impertinent letter before Parliament.
"You have no claim for pay as consul, and Your consulate will at once cease on reaching the Coast but you will have no claim whatever": This was substantially the letter and one of the most impertinence that ever left the Foreign or any other office .
On my first appointment Lord Clarendon's words imply increase of salary.
I have a Despatch of - Lord

[0004] Lord Malmesbury - stating his conviction that my salary was far too low: My Foreign Office instructions tell me to take my steamer to Rovuma, does that not imply the duty to share in my loss by her?

D^r Miller got from Lord Russell £800 a year for scientific research and no consular duties in Madagascar. While he intended to give me only £500 a year if I settled anywhere. I mean to claim any salary increased during the whole of the time from

1864

[0005]

1864 onwards. I may not get it tho'. Thornton's brother got his even for going with von der Decken.
That letter with the foolish instructions of self elected busy bodies worried in spite of every effort to be philosophical and the worry is embittered by remembering that good Lord Palmerston sent M^r Hayward to ask me
"what he could do as he was anxious to serve me".

My mind was so sorely jaded by that last book and the wickedness of the

[0006]

the Portuguese doings, that I never thought of ought but my work. He meant something for myself but I wanted the Ports of East Africa to be opened to free commerce .
My only solace was Sir Francis Beaufort's words to the Arctic Explorers. - "Remember gentlemen you are going on discovery and not on survey" as if to me

A Despatch among the lost 40 was a supplement to that from Bangalosa and a very good one .
It would have given you an idea of the watershed such as no-theorist ever dreamed.
I have a copy in Ujiji in my journal.
