My Dear M^r Murray the payments which you will oblige me by making for Agnes are as follows:

One hundred & twenty pounds a year to Madame Hocédé, and probably the best way of doing it would be for an arrangement to be made in Paris

[0002]

by which she could draw it quarterly - and also one Pound a month as pocket money for Agnes

A sum will also be required for Music & German masters and for washing, and this Agnes will ascertain and give you information

[0003]

She has clothing enough to last till she goes out of mourning and then she will consult M^{rs} Murray as to what dresses she may need, and you will be good enough to take

M^{rs} Murray's opinion as sufficient authority for the amount necessary to be spent in dress.

[0004]

In any question that might arise you will find M_{-}^{r} Oswell's judgment with your own sufficient for guidance: M^r Young's opinion will always be reasonable and of value. But in all cases I am sure that you will act for the best or what at the time seems to be so and for that I shall be satisfied and thankful whatever may be the result
