My Dear M- Layard In reply to your enquiry about snails I have to confess that there is a singular and blessed scarcity of them here. I can recollect having seen only nine species - of these one is a black velveteen coated individual without shell, and another very like that yellow civilized snail which we used to see when "daisies & buttercups gladdened our sight" He is houseless too. Whether this scarcity arises from the tremendous grass burnings [0002] that annually sweep over the land, or from [the] want [of] enterprise (in the animals) which has consigned this fine country to paltry peddling in ivory & sneaking dealing in in human flesh, I cannot pretend to say, but if you are fond of throwing snails into your dissenting neighbour's garden, you need not come here. It would be all up with you. but I shall try & send you a few some day.

D<sup>r</sup> Kirk got away a good botanical collection and M<sup>r</sup> C Livingstone a good many birds. but it has been uphill work - want of room and perpetual damp in our wretched asthmatic steamer seriously impeded every effort. But if we live, we shall do something more, i.e. we shall try & try again [0003]

Thanks for the Pinches - the good old fellow swam ashore seven miles west of where he was sent afloat! letters lost.

I am &c
D. Livingstone

We leave our craft at Tette if she floats so long she is completely done. A better vessel is necessary before any collection can be made Thanks for the zoological information
